From the Pittsburgh Dispatch, Sept. 25th, 1850.

"Very seldom do we read of an actual case of recovery, where hope had altogether been lost, to parallel that which was Monday investigated by a Dispatch reporter, who had heard in various quarters persons talking to their friends of a cure, scenningly little short of marvelous, that had been performed. The plain facts in the case referred to, without exaggeration, are those, as they were learned from the mother of the young man, his pastor and other persons well known in the community: Wonderful.

"William Lincoln Curtis is the name of the young man in question. He is now employed at H. K. Porter & Co.'s locamotive works in Pittsburgh, Pa. A year ago he resided with his mother on Grant street. About that time he went to bed one evening with a violent pain in his shoulder, the result, he thought, of a cold. The next morning the shoulder was greatly swollen, the pain was intense, and nehes were felt all through his system. His case was speedily developed into a violent form of chronic rheumatism, among the first notable features of which was the paralysis of his left arm.

"He gradually grew worse, and in a few months the clown and knee joints and both ankles became enormously enlarged. In March last the cheek hones began to enlarge, and upon his left side particularly, spreading his face out of all resemblance to his former self. The pain in all his joints became intense; fever, with its deteriorating effects, was now added, and he became rapidly reduced to the semblance of a keleton, while vitative reached its lowest possible condition, and his sufferings were outed in the way called a way. At this time physicians well known in Pittsburgh informed became; that they could give no hopes of ecovery.

his parents that they could give no hopes of recavery.

"The young man finally commenced taking that wonderful medicine, Paruna. In two weeks quite a change for the better, was perceptible. In six weeks all the enlargement had been reduced completely, while in spirits and strength the patient was quite as well ashe had ever been in his life. He was greatly surprised at his improved condition.

grave; yet they kept no vacant chair for ber.

While John Inglefield and his family were sitting round the hearth, with the shadowadancing behind them on the wall, the outer door was opened, and a light footstep came along the passage. The latch of the inner door was lifted by some familiar hand, and a young girl came in wearing a cloak and hood, which she shook off and laid on the table beneath the looking glass. Then, after gazing a moment at the fireside circle, she approached and took the seat at John Inglefield's right hand, as if it had been reserved on purpose for her.

"Here I am at last, father," said she. "You ate your Thanksgiving dinner without me; but I have come back to spend the evening with you."

Yes—It was Prudence Inglefield. She wore the same neat and maidenly attire which she had been accustomed to put on when the household work was over for the advent here had been accustomed to put on when the household work was over for

If she had spent the many months of her absence in guilt and infamy, yet they seemed to have left no trace on her gentle aspect. She could not have looked less altered had she merely stepped away from her father's fireside for half an hour and returned while the blaze was quivering upwards from the same brands that were burning at her departure. And to John Inglefield she was the very image of his buried wife, such as he remembered her on the first Thanksgiving which they had passed under their own roof; therefore, though naturally a stern and rugged

"You are welcome home, Prudence," said he, glancing sideways at her, and his voice faltered. "Your mother would have rejoiced to see you, but she has been gone from us these four months."

"I know it, father, I know it," replied Prudence, quickly. "And yet, when I first came in my eyes were so dazzled by the firelight that she seemed to be sitting in this very chair."

By this time the other members of the family had begun to recover from their surprise, and became sensible that it was no ghost from the grave nor vision of their vivid recollections, but Prudence her own self. Her brother was the next that greeted her. He advanced and hold out his land affectionately, as a brother, for with all his kindness he was still a series of the later islands of the Pacific. white this was passing, the twin-girl—the rosebud that had grown on the same stem with the castaway—stood gazing at her sister, longing to fling herself upon her boson, so that the tentrilis of their hearts might interwine again. At first she was restrained by mingled grief and shame, and by a dread that Pandence was too much changed to respond to her affection, or that her own purity would be felt as a reproach by the lost one. But as she listened to the familiar voice, while the face grew more and more familiar; she forgot everything, save that Prudence had come back. Springing forward, she would have elapsed her in a close embrace. At that very instant, however, Prudence started from her chair, and held out both her hands with a warning gesture.

"No, Mary—no, ny sister," cried she, "Do not you touch me. Your bosom must not be pressed to mine!"

Mary shuddered, and stood still, for she left that something darker than the grave was between Prufence and herself, though they seemed so near each other in the light of their father's hearth, where they had grown up togother. Meanwhile, Prudence threw her eyes around the room, in search of one who had not yet bidden her welcome. He had withdrawn from his seat by the fireside, and was standing near the door, with his face averted, so that his features could be discerned only by the filtedering shadow of the profile on the wall. But Prudence called to him, in a cheerful and kindly tone:

"Come, Robert," said she, "won't you shake hands with your old friend?"

Perils of Rapid Civilization

When, however barbarous peoples come a contact with a higher civilization, they lmost invariably undergo a decay pretty early proportional to the intimacy of the tract, or rather to the with which they endeavor to co with which they endeavor to conform themselves to the manners of their new neighbors. Here is an important point, There is no mysterious influence, no "blight," caused by civilization. There is much loose talk about barbarians "melting away" before the light of progress. It may do for the poet to speak of the withering breath of civilization as blasting the child of Nature, but the real cause of the depressing effect of our civilization upon the savage less in himself, and in his sudden attempt to assimilate what is foreign to the whole tenor of his personal laddes, confirmed as they are by centuring of inherited experience. The instances, plentiful enough, of race-decay, following civilization, are all in peoples in whom circumstances have led to a sudden and unnatural conformity with the manners of a stronger and more advanced nation. This has occurred generally where the savages have been brought in contact either with a conquering people or with missionaries, the latter cause operating for the most part only when the barbarous tribe was small and the Christianizing influence therefore especially strong, as in the Sandwich Islands. In one notable case the therefore especially strong, as in the Sand-wich Islands. In one notable case the method of contact has been by the bar-barians themselves becoming conquerers.

II. F. BEHRENS' 2217 and 221 Medical.

No. 1404 Chapline Street, Near Fourteenth Stree The best evidence of a physician's success is the testimony of his patients. The increasing domains for my professional services prove that have dealt honorably and fairly with those who have consulted me, Invertuse a patient's name without permission, though I have many hundred certificates from those whom I have curred after they had been pronounced incurable. A thorough medical education with many years hospitul experience and familiarity with theraputic agents, a close observance of temperamental peculiarities and strict instance haveland management insures success.

tervance of temperamental peculiarities and strict attention to hygienic management insures success a cure is possible, and I frankly give the patient my opinion.
